YOUR CHAPTER AT A GLANCE

Give your own work a place in the week

Morgan, you have described a working life crowded with coordination, practical demands and the responsibility of keeping things moving. Alongside that work, you want to teach small creative groups. You also want the relationships around your work to remain workable as your role changes.

The central question is one of allocation: whose work receives your time, and where does your own direction enter the arrangement? Your chart offers a particularly useful way to explore this. Your Libra Sun and Scorpio Pluto occupy the sixth house of everyday work. Your Aquarius Moon occupies the tenth house of public contribution. Together, these placements suggest a strong investment in work that serves a purpose and holds a wider system together.

Two current transits focus the question. Saturn's opposition to your Sun invites a review of obligations, boundaries and available capacity. Pluto's conjunction with your Moon brings a slower inquiry into the role you occupy and the feelings attached to changing it. One concerns the structure of your week. The other concerns who you feel able to become within it.

PERSONAL INSIGHT

Give your creative work a defined place in your agreements. Let the change become visible in the week you actually live.

Begin with one recurring responsibility. Establish what it asks of you, who shares it and how it could be reshaped. Then identify one modest teaching experiment that the revised arrangement could support. This is the practical direction that the following pages develop.

YOUR CHAPTER AT A GLANCE

Three things to carry

YOUR FIRST PRIORITY

Make responsibility specific. Choose one recurring task and agree its scope, owner and review date.

YOUR SECOND PRIORITY

Give a changing role room to be felt. Notice what you value in being the reliable coordinator, and what you now want to contribute as a teacher.

YOUR AVAILABLE RESOURCE

Use your capacity to put experience into words. Your Moon-Mercury trine offers a symbolic resource for turning a feeling into a clear observation and a workable request.

During your first short reflection, use your calendar and three recent examples to estimate what one recurring coordination task requires. Include preparation and follow-up. Use the second reflection to shape a request for an October conversation.

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

A map for reflection

This guide uses evolutionary astrology as a symbolic framework for personal reflection. The language of soul and development belongs to that spiritual tradition. Treat the interpretations as invitations to examine your experience, and use your own knowledge of your circumstances when choosing a response. Ground consequential decisions in relevant evidence and qualified advice.

Your birth chart supplies the underlying pattern. Its twelve houses describe areas of life. The Ascendant marks the eastern horizon and begins the first house. A transit compares a current planet position with your birth chart; an orb is the allowed distance from an exact angle. Exact marks the calculated alignment. Near contact marks the closest approach in the stated period.

The two main chapters are selected priorities within a larger chart. Each moves from an astrological observation to a possible experience, then to your stated situation and a practical response. Read the interpretations alongside what you know about your life. A useful question can remain useful while your first answer changes.

The practice runs for 90 calendar days, from 1 October through 29 December. Its three 30-day stages provide a working rhythm. The planetary contact windows have their own dates, shown on pages 18 and 19.

Morgan Ellis and the personal circumstances in this demonstration are fictional. The birth inputs are precisely defined examples, and the chart and dates are calculated from them. This independent concept awaits partner review. Method sources and calculation details appear on pages 26 to 28.

THE PATTERN YOU BRING

The craft of being useful

Your Pluto at 1°13' Scorpio in the sixth house places a central evolutionary question in the everyday world of work, service and improvement. A possible strength here is the willingness to look closely at what needs repair. You may take real satisfaction in understanding a difficult process and making it function more effectively.

In your chosen situation, that symbolism has an immediate application. Coordination often includes work that becomes visible only when something goes wrong. As an exercise, consider which parts of your contribution receive explicit recognition and which are simply absorbed into other people's expectations. Your own account will establish where the pattern fits.

The lunar nodes are the two points where the Moon's orbital path crosses the Sun's apparent path. In this evolutionary framework, the south node represents familiar patterns; the north node supplies a direction to explore. Your south node at 28°44' Scorpio in the seventh house brings loyalty and shared commitments into the story. Consider when care for a relationship leads you to reorganise your own day. Your experience establishes how this possibility fits.

Your Moon at 2°12' Aquarius in the tenth house adds a different need: to contribute in a way that has social meaning and reflects your own perspective. The public role can become a place of emotional investment. Being able to see the whole group may feel satisfying, especially when your contribution makes collective work possible.

A QUESTION TO LIVE WITH

Which part of your current role expresses a freely chosen commitment, and which part survives mainly through habit?

THE PATTERN YOU BRING

The Soul Thread

01 DEVELOPED CAPACITY

See what a group needs and help daily work function.

Pluto: Scorpio / house 6 • Moon: Aquarius / house 10

02 A PATTERN TO EXPLORE

Notice when being useful becomes tied to your place in a relationship.

Moon square Pluto: 0°59' • South node: Scorpio / house 7

03 A DIRECTION TO PRACTISE

Claim a steady pace and protect preparation for your chosen contribution.

North node + Ascendant: Taurus / house 1 • Polarity point: Taurus / house 12

The diagram connects six factors. Pluto, the south node and the Moon establish the pattern being explored. The remaining three factors have distinct jobs: the polarity point names a developmental destination, the north node suggests a route, and the Ascendant offers a way of engaging with the experience.

Your polarity point is calculated exactly opposite Pluto: 1°13' Taurus in the twelfth house. The destination proposed here is quiet, protected preparation. Your Taurus north node in the first house suggests the route: choosing time and resources according to your own values. Your Taurus Ascendant gives the experiment a pace: begin with something small enough to sustain.

For your teaching project, these functions meet in one decision: reserve a modest preparation block, state why it matters to you, and agree how it can recur within the revised workload.

The Soul Thread is an original report component. The six-factor foundation follows the publicly described course framework listed in source [1]. Each placement is calculated from this fictional case.

THE PATTERN YOU BRING

When work carries identity

Your Moon forms a square to Pluto with an orb of $0^{\circ}59'$: their separation is close to 90° . This is a close natal connection. The Moon occupies the tenth house of public contribution; Pluto occupies the sixth house of daily work. In this symbolic reading, the effort of making things function can become closely tied to how you experience your place in the wider world.

Consider the moment when a practical request lands. You may be responding to the task itself, to the people involved, or to what accepting it says about your role. Those motives can coexist. Separating them gives you more room to choose. A small request can deserve a small answer even when the relationship matters deeply.

Your Libra Sun in the sixth house adds an interest in cooperation and a workable distribution of effort. The developmental question concerns the form that cooperation takes. Is the division of work visible? Do people have the same understanding of what each role includes? Could an arrangement continue if your availability changed?

The Taurus direction gives these questions a concrete destination. Name the conditions under which you can contribute with steadiness. Those conditions may include preparation time, a clear finish point and a realistic number of commitments. For you, this proposed direction connects personal values with how a group organises its work.

PERSONAL INSIGHT

Your next chapter can be built through a clearer relationship between contribution, capacity and ownership of your time.

YOUR FIRST PRIORITY

A workable agreement

Saturn opposes your natal Sun exactly on 12 October 2026. The current pass is within the chosen 2° orb from 16 September to 11 November. An earlier exact pass occurred on 15 May 2026; the next is calculated for 6 February 2027. The repetition gives this chapter a longer frame than the October contact alone.

Your Sun at 10°43' Libra in the sixth house directs the reading towards everyday contribution, fairness and the organisation of work. Transiting Saturn occupies the opposite part of your chart, in the twelfth natal house. The symbolic tension connects visible service with the quieter space needed to prepare, reflect and regain a sense of direction.

In your stated situation, the most useful interpretation concerns the terms of your commitment. Your wish to teach will become more workable when preparation has a place alongside coordination. This can involve a redistribution of tasks, a clearer boundary around one responsibility, or a limited trial of a new weekly structure.

Saturn's role in this reading is to make the arrangement specific. How much time does the work require? What has been agreed? Who can decide on a change? Your answers turn a general feeling of pressure into something that can be discussed with other people.

PERSONAL INSIGHT

Use October to name the terms under which your contribution can continue.

YOUR FIRST PRIORITY

Count the whole task

Choose one recurring responsibility that frequently expands. It might involve arranging an activity, handling messages or resolving last-minute changes. Take three recent examples from your calendar or memory, including preparation and follow-up.

Use your first short reflection to estimate the work involved in those examples. Approximate durations are sufficient. Note what initiated the task and where its scope grew. Three examples give you something concrete to discuss while keeping the exercise inside the time you have set aside.

Then write a simple description with three parts: the result required, the work involved and the person currently responsible. This gives your Libra Sun's concern with fairness a concrete expression. People can respond to a described arrangement more directly than to an unspoken expectation.

The emotional part deserves space as well. You might feel satisfaction when you solve something, irritation when the task grows, or concern about how a request will be received. Record the feeling in a separate sentence. That distinction helps you bring both useful information and an honest personal position to the conversation.

A working sentence

"This task currently includes preparation, coordination and follow-up. I would like us to agree which parts belong with me and how much time we can allocate to them."

A QUESTION TO LIVE WITH

What part of this responsibility becomes visible when you count the whole task?

YOUR FIRST PRIORITY

Give preparation a place

The twelfth-house side of the Saturn opposition matters here. It provides a symbolic reason to examine the space around the visible work. A teaching session includes preparation, the session itself and whatever attention is needed afterwards. Your emerging role needs room for all three.

The Taurus polarity point in your twelfth house reinforces the proposed direction towards a protected, tangible rhythm. Choose a preparation block short enough to fit your current life. Put it on the same calendar as your other commitments. Establish what it is for before the week begins.

For the first experiment, that block could produce a single session outline: who it is for, what participants will do and what materials are needed. Keep the format modest. A clear outline can give the larger idea a shape you can discuss.

Your practical constraint is two short reflection periods each week. Use the first to notice how the current arrangement is working. Use the second to decide one adjustment. The teaching preparation itself needs an explicit place in the revised workload, which is why the October conversation comes first.

PERSONAL INSIGHT

Treat preparation as part of the work you are choosing to make possible.

The 90-day plan proposes a bounded experiment. Its feasibility depends on the agreement you reach and your actual available capacity.

YOUR FIRST PRIORITY

Let the agreement be tested

A useful agreement describes both a change and a way to review it. You might propose a four-week trial in which one coordination duty is shared and one preparation block is protected. Choose the scale together with the people affected.

This gives the Saturn transit a practical expression: a commitment you can observe. At a weekly reflection, review one recent example of the task. Did its scope stay within the agreement? Was the handover clear? Did the preparation block take place? Bring those observations to the review.

The exact contact on 12 October can serve as a marker for reflection. Choose the conversation date according to people's availability, preparation and willingness to engage. The astrological date describes the alignment; the quality of the conversation depends on the circumstances you create.

As this pass moves outside the 2° orb on 11 November, you can continue evaluating the arrangement. The later pass in early February provides another contextual marker for revisiting how the pattern has developed. This report's practice period ends in December, leaving room for the wider process to continue.

Your first practical commitment

Prepare one request, discuss it during October, and agree a date for reviewing the trial. Keep the request focused enough that everyone understands what would change.

A QUESTION TO LIVE WITH

What would count as a workable improvement by the end of the trial?

YOUR SECOND PRIORITY

A role that can grow

Pluto is close to your natal Moon throughout most of the report period. Its closest approach within these 90 days occurs on 16 October 2026, around its change of direction, at an orb of 0°52'. This is a near contact. The earlier exact conjunction within the wider search period occurred on 13 December 2025.

Your Moon at 2°12' Aquarius sits in the tenth house. In this reading, emotional investment gathers around contribution, visibility and your place within a wider system. The wish to teach gives that symbolism a particular direction: you want to participate through work that carries more of your own creative perspective.

Pluto's conjunction invites a deeper examination of that public role. You may discover that changing a timetable is relatively straightforward compared with allowing other people to see you differently. The familiar role can hold satisfaction, belonging and a sense of competence. A new role may ask you to tolerate a period of learning in public.

Your own experience will establish which of these possibilities fits. Begin by naming what you want to preserve in your current contribution. Then name what you would like people to experience through your teaching. Both answers belong in the next arrangement.

PERSONAL INSIGHT

Make room for a fuller contribution, including the feelings that accompany a change of role.

YOUR SECOND PRIORITY

Listen beneath the role

The Moon-Pluto square in your birth chart connects this transit to an existing pattern. Pluto's current approach to the Moon brings attention to the relationship between your public contribution and the effort you invest in keeping daily work functioning. This is the same sixth-house and tenth-house connection introduced on page 7.

An important question concerns what happens inside you when a responsibility changes hands. Relief may appear alongside uncertainty. You may enjoy the extra room and wonder whether your contribution will remain visible. These are possibilities to explore through experience, with room for your own response to be different.

Use one recent moment as your starting point: handing over a task, asking for recognition, or mentioning the teaching project. Complete the sentence, "What mattered to me was..." A sense of relief may point towards welcome space. Unease may invite a closer look at recognition or belonging. Treat your actual response as the evidence for the next question.

Your Aquarius Moon can symbolically support perspective: the ability to step back and see a pattern within a group. For this practice, include your own experience in that wider view. Your wish to teach is part of the information the group needs as it plans its future.

A QUESTION TO LIVE WITH

What do you hope will remain true about your place in the group as your contribution changes?

These reflections explore meaning and emotion. They draw on the chart's symbolic framework and the fictional situation supplied for this example.

YOUR SECOND PRIORITY

Let people meet the new contribution

Your proposed teaching role needs a form that other people can encounter. A small session, an outline or a short discussion about the idea can make your intention visible. Choose the step that fits the agreement reached in October.

The tenth-house emphasis suggests a useful question about visibility: what do you want to be recognised for contributing? Write the answer as an activity. “I want to guide a small group through a creative process” is specific enough to develop. You can then decide what the process involves and who might find it useful.

The south node in your seventh house makes the relational dimension relevant to this reading. A familiar agreement may need to change so that your new contribution has room. Speak about the relationship you want to maintain as well as the work you want to develop. This gives the other person a concrete place in the conversation.

For example: “I value the way we bring people together. I would like my role to include leading a small creative session, and I want to work out how we can organise the coordination around that.” The wording is a starting point. Use language that reflects the actual relationship.

A changing role becomes easier to evaluate when its first version is bounded. Choose a clear purpose, limited preparation and a review point. Your experience of that first version can guide what follows.

YOUR SECOND PRIORITY

A resource you can use

Your Moon and Mercury form a trine, a relationship close to 120°, with an orb of 3°06'. Mercury is in Libra in the sixth house; the Moon is in Aquarius in the tenth. Within this symbolic framework, the connection gives a reason to try putting a felt experience into clear, usable language.

The connection is especially relevant to the two main themes. You are examining both the organisation of daily work and your emotional investment in a public role. Mercury's contribution to this reading is the bridge: a clear description of what is happening, followed by a considered request.

In your first weekly reflection, write three short sentences. Describe one event. Name what it brought up for you. State what you would like to ask or change. Keep each sentence close to the experience. Your second reflection can return to the same event and check whether the request still fits.

A possible example is: "The preparation took longer than the time we had allocated. I felt concerned about how much room remained for the creative session. I would like us to agree a realistic preparation block before we set the next date." Adapt the example to what actually happens.

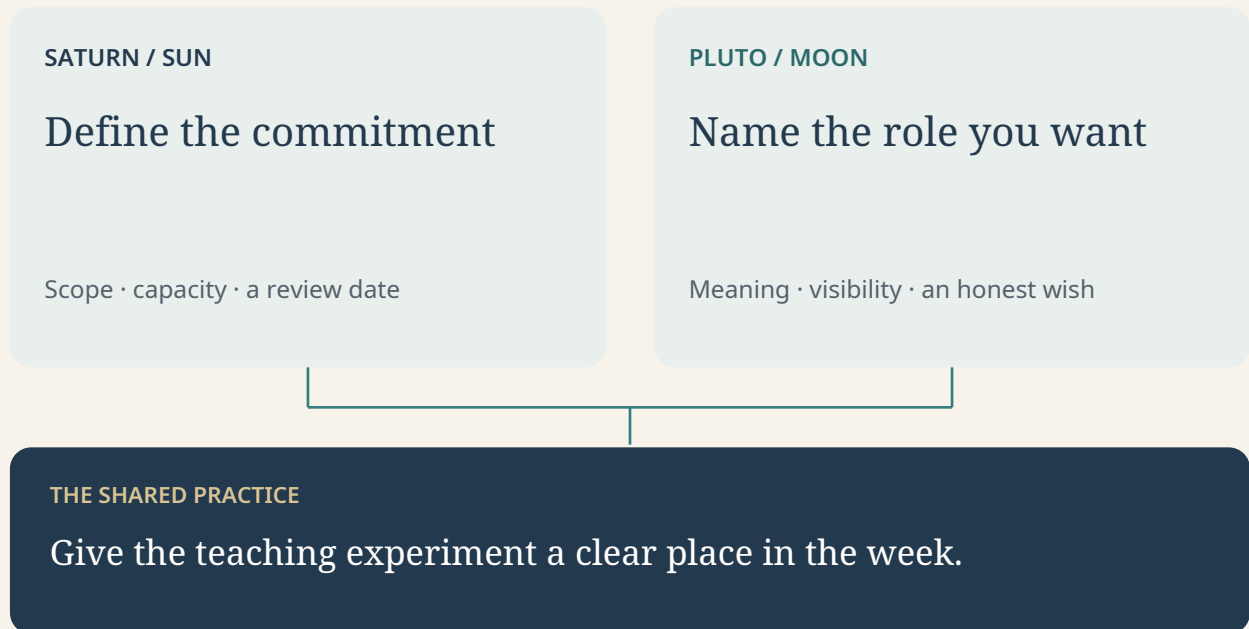

PERSONAL INSIGHT

Observation. Feeling. Clear request. This is the communication practice running through your plan.

This natal connection supplies a consistent thread through the report. Test the communication practice in a real exchange. Notice whether it helps you express your experience and understand the other person's account; use that feedback to refine the next request.

ONE CHAPTER, TWO MOVEMENTS

Structure and permission

Saturn's opposition to the Sun addresses the terms of your commitment. Pluto's conjunction with the Moon addresses what the role means to you. These movements run on different timescales. An October agreement can change the week promptly; your feelings about visibility and belonging may take shape through several experiences of the new role.

The natal Moon-Pluto square links the sixth house of daily work with the tenth house of public contribution. In this reading, a handover can therefore open two questions at once: has the workload changed, and how do you experience your place in the group? Review each question on its own terms.

Your Taurus direction makes the next step tangible. Protect a preparation block and agree its place in the shared workload. Then give yourself room to discover what teaching feels like. The experiment can develop through both a workable arrangement and an honest account of your experience.

ONE CHAPTER, TWO MOVEMENTS

One decision you can use

Imagine that an additional activity is proposed while you are preparing the creative session. Your first movement is structural. Establish the work involved, the available time and who would own each part. This is the Saturn side of the question.

Your second movement is personal. Notice what the request touches in you. It might bring enthusiasm, a desire to remain helpful, concern about disappointing someone, or a genuine wish to be involved. Naming that response gives the Pluto-Moon inquiry a place in the decision.

Now bring the two together. Decide which version of the commitment fits both your available capacity and the contribution you are choosing to develop. You might offer a defined part of the activity, propose a different date, or agree that another person will coordinate it. The appropriate answer depends on the situation.

PERSONAL INSIGHT

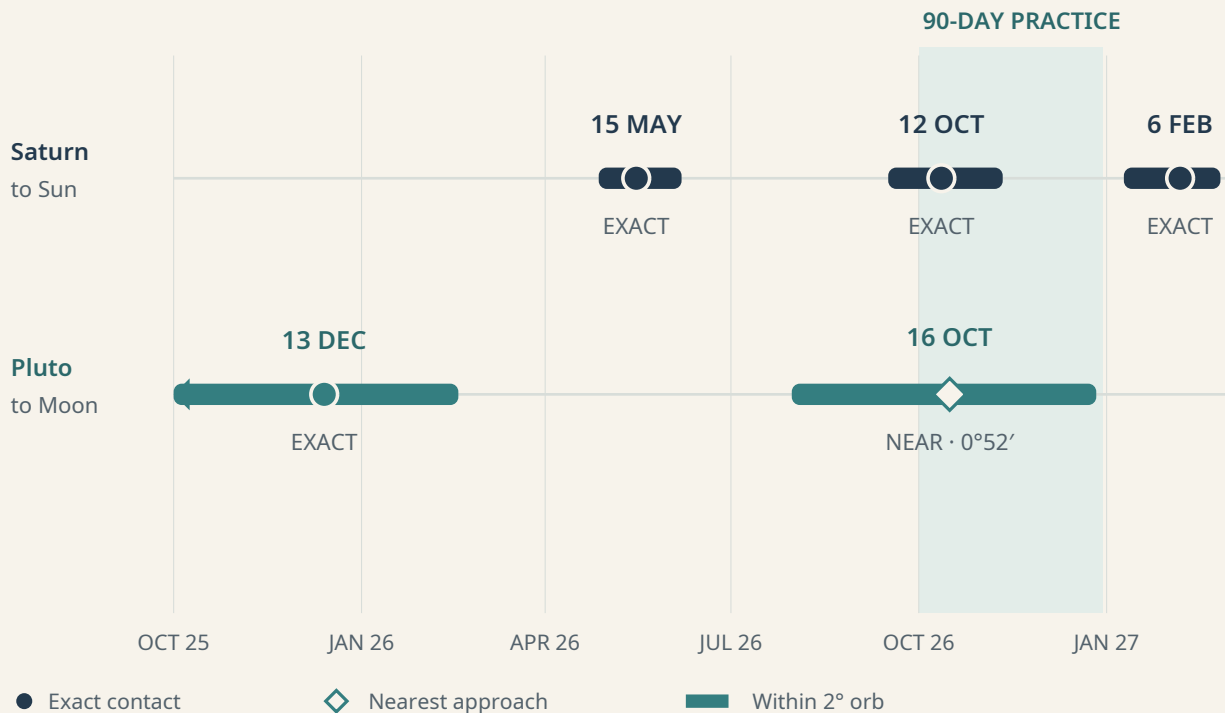

Choose commitments whose purpose, scope and place in your week you can name.

This is your decision rule for the 90 days. It protects the practical conditions for change while allowing relationships to participate in the process. Use it in the October conversation and again when reviewing the teaching experiment.

A successful practice can be modest: one task becomes clearer, one preparation block happens, and one conversation gives your own direction a firmer place in the shared plan. Those changes provide useful information for the next decision.

YOUR TIMING MAP

The longer chapter

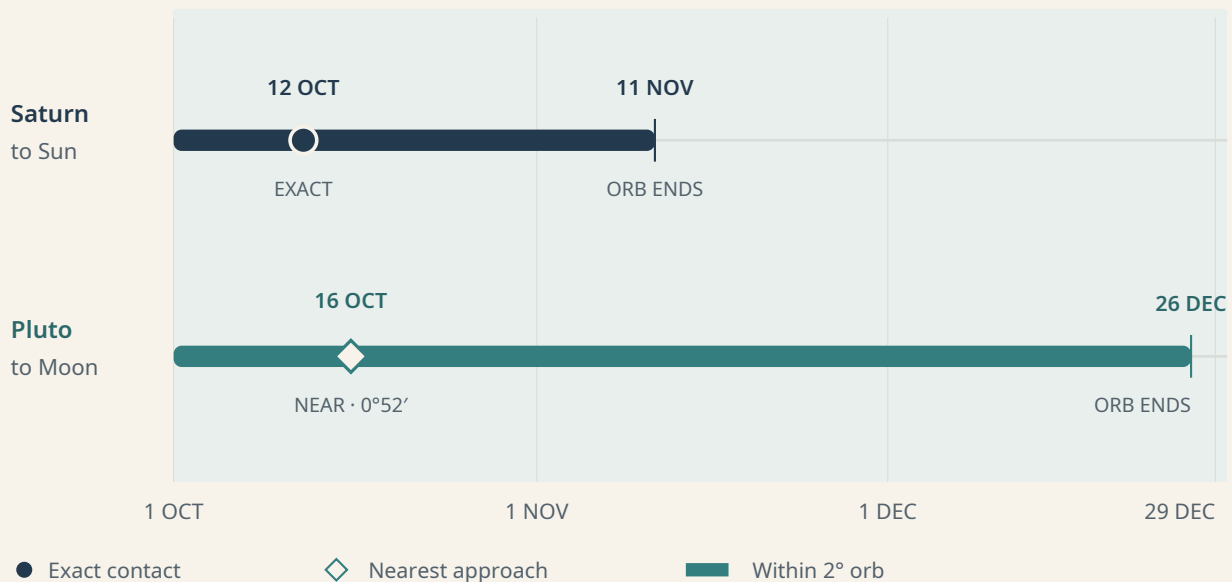

Saturn's three exact oppositions form a repeat sequence around the same natal Sun. The October pass belongs to a process that includes May 2026 and early February 2027. Use your own records to see whether a relevant theme was already present in May. The calculation alone establishes the alignment.

Pluto's earlier exact conjunction with your Moon falls in December 2025 within the wider search window. Its later return inside the 2° orb begins on 30 July 2026. In October it approaches your Moon and changes direction with a remaining gap. This pass then moves beyond the selected orb on 26 December.

Overview shown: 1 October 2025 to 28 February 2027. Full search coverage: 1 October 2025 to 30 December 2027, end exclusive. A left-pointing arrow marks a contact window already active when the search begins. Bands show the selected 2° orb; the pale vertical field shows your practice period.

YOUR TIMING MAP

These 90 days

The most concentrated pair of markers falls in mid-October: Saturn's exact opposition on 12 October and Pluto's nearest approach on 16 October. Treat them as prompts to notice the two themes in your experience. Arrange conversations and practical changes around real readiness and availability.

Saturn leaves the selected 2° orb on 11 November. Pluto leaves it late on 26 December. These are calculation boundaries, useful for describing the chart. The responsibilities, relationships and learning you are working with can continue across them.

Your practice stages run from 1 to 30 October, 31 October to 29 November, and 30 November to 29 December. They organise observation, a bounded experiment and review. Each stage can make use of the same two short weekly reflections.

All displayed dates use Europe/London. The February 2027 Saturn contact is calculated just after midnight on 6 February. In a ± 5 -minute birth-time model test, that contact spans 5 to 6 February. Dates in this demonstration use the exact chosen fictional input.

YOUR 90-DAY PRACTICE · DAYS 1 TO 30

Observe and name

1 to 30 October 2026

Begin with the recurring coordination task selected on page 9. In your first short reflection, use three recent examples to estimate its preparation, coordination and follow-up. Write one sentence describing its actual scope. Keep the notes brief enough to revisit during the later review.

Use the second reflection period to prepare a request. Name the change you are proposing, explain what it would make possible, and consider who would be affected. Your wish to teach belongs in this explanation. It gives the proposed adjustment a clear purpose.

Begin each reflection with a quiet minute, your feet resting comfortably on the floor. Let your breath find its ordinary rhythm. Notice whether you feel hurried or settled. Carry that observation into your decision about what the week can hold.

Hold one prepared conversation during October. Page 23 provides a structure you can adapt. Aim to agree a bounded trial, a division of responsibility and a review date. The size of the trial should reflect the capacity and resources available to everyone involved.

Keep the emotional inquiry close to the action. After the conversation, write down how it felt to state your own direction. Notice what was easy to say and what needed more preparation. This is information for the next exchange.

YOUR PRACTICAL OUTPUT

By the end of October: one responsibility described, one request discussed and a trial defined where agreement allows.

A QUESTION TO LIVE WITH

What became clearer when you put your own direction into the conversation?

YOUR 90-DAY PRACTICE · DAYS 31 TO 60

Try a smaller version

31 October to 29 November 2026

Use the agreement reached in October to choose a small, workable version of the teaching idea. It could be a short session with a few participants or a prepared outline discussed with a colleague. Let the scale follow the time and support that are actually available.

Define its purpose in one sentence. Then specify the activity, preparation, materials and end point. A clear frame gives the experiment something you can evaluate. It also helps the people around you understand how this contribution fits alongside the coordination work.

Use the first weekly reflection to observe the practical arrangement. Did the preparation time hold? Which part took more attention than expected? Use the second reflection to describe your experience of the role. What felt engaging about guiding the activity, and what would benefit from more practice?

When an agreement is still developing, make the experiment a short planning conversation or a single-page session outline. Keep it within the capacity already available. This allows you to continue learning about the idea while the larger arrangement takes shape.

YOUR PRACTICAL OUTPUT

By the end of November: one bounded version of the idea explored, with a brief record of what happened.

A QUESTION TO LIVE WITH

What did the small version teach you about the kind of contribution you want to make?

YOUR 90-DAY PRACTICE · DAYS 61 TO 90

Keep what can continue

30 November to 29 December 2026

Review the working agreement beside your three opening examples. Choose one recent instance of the same task. Compare its scope, the handover and the preparation time that followed. This gives you a grounded way to judge whether the arrangement made the intended difference.

Use your first weekly reflection for that practical comparison. Use the second for the role itself: what did you enjoy about guiding the creative activity, and what still felt unfamiliar? A clearer timetable and a growing sense of belonging are separate observations. Each can guide the size of your next step.

Use that review to choose a next step of appropriate size. You might repeat the same session, refine the outline, or keep developing the idea while a responsibility is redistributed. Choose a version with a clear purpose and a place in the calendar.

The report closes on 29 December. Saturn's next exact pass in early February remains part of the wider context. You can use that later period as another opportunity to examine the arrangement, while making present decisions from the evidence available now.

YOUR PRACTICAL OUTPUT

At the close of the 90 days: one concrete learning, one arrangement worth keeping and one next step.

A QUESTION TO LIVE WITH

Which part of this change has earned a continuing place in your week?

A CONVERSATION TO HAVE

Make the request usable

Choose the person who can help clarify the responsibility you selected. Prepare a specific example from your notes and one proposal. This is the same conversation included in the first month of your practice.

An opening to adapt

“I value the work we do to bring people together. I have been looking at what my coordination role currently includes, and I would like us to review one part of it.”

“The task I want to discuss is [name the task]. At the moment it involves [describe the work]. I would like to try [one specific change] for [an agreed period], with a review on [date].”

“I also want to make room to develop a small creative session. The change I am proposing would give its preparation a clear place in the week. How could we organise this in a way that works for the people involved?”

Listen for the practical detail

Ask what the other person needs in order to consider the request. Clarify who would take each part of the task and how a handover would work. Write down the agreement in a form both of you can refer to.

When more discussion is needed, identify the next piece of information and a time to return to it. That keeps the conversation connected to a practical decision.

A QUESTION TO LIVE WITH

Does the agreement make your time, your responsibility and your proposed contribution clear?

CARRY THIS FORWARD

Your Return Card

MORGAN / A PRACTICE TO RETURN TO

I give my chosen work its time.

I let my changing role take form.

I build a rhythm I can keep.

I bring my wishes into the room.

ASK What needs a clearer place in my week?

DO Name one responsibility and one request.

Read the card at the beginning of one weekly reflection. Choose the line that feels most relevant to the situation in front of you. Then connect it to something specific in your calendar or an agreement you are discussing.

The four lines bring the report's main directions together: the Sun's relationship with Saturn, the Moon's changing public role, the Taurus emphasis on a tangible pace, and the place of cooperation in your working life.

This mantra and the Return Card are original components created for the Morgan Ellis demonstration. They are proposed report elements awaiting partner review.

CARRY THIS FORWARD

The work you choose

Morgan, your starting question brought two commitments together: the responsibilities you already hold and the creative direction you want to develop. The chart-based reading has given each of them a place. Your next step is to let that understanding shape a real arrangement.

The Saturn chapter asks for terms you can name. The Pluto chapter asks you to include the meaning of your role and the feelings that accompany change. Your natal Moon-Pluto square connects those inquiries, while the Moon-Mercury trine offers a way to bring them into language.

The Taurus direction remains practical. Give a chosen piece of work enough time and steadiness to find its form. The twelfth-house polarity point gives quiet preparation a legitimate place within that rhythm. The teaching idea can begin with a modest version and grow through what you learn from doing it.

At the end of the 90 days, look for evidence in the week itself. Which agreement became clearer? Where did a preparation block hold? What did you discover when you let other people encounter your creative contribution? These questions can show the shape of the change in terms you can use.

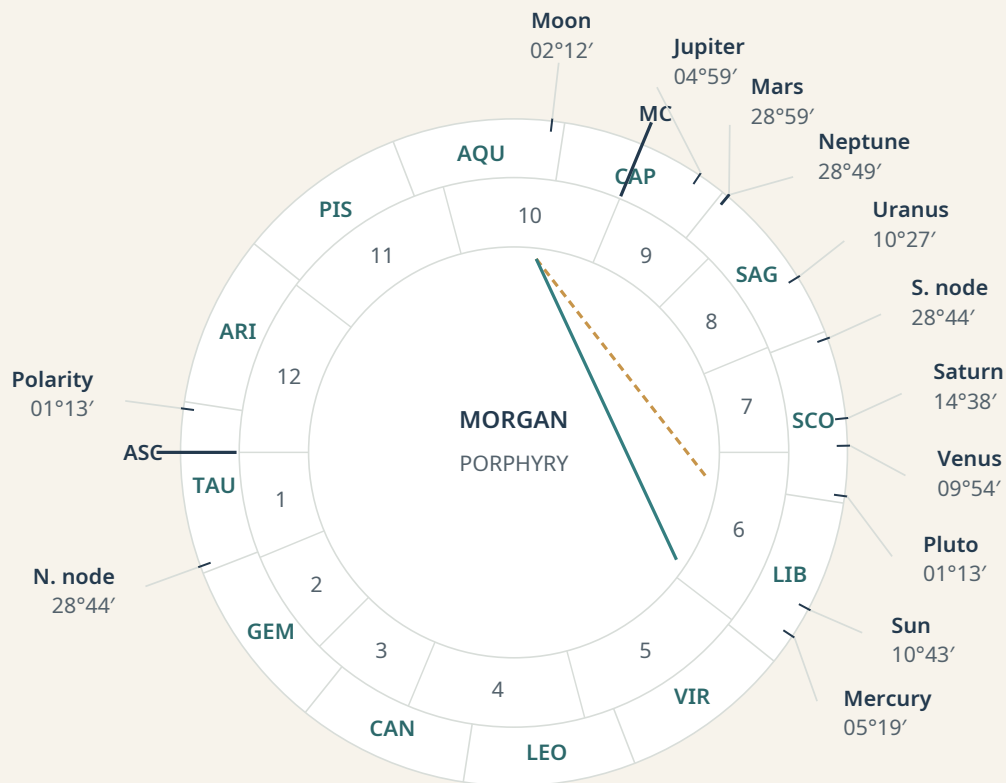

PERSONAL INSIGHT

Let your contribution include the work you are choosing to grow.

Carry one clear request, one workable commitment and one lesson into the next chapter. Keep the scale close enough to your life that you can return to it, practise it and make it your own.

Calculation profile

Swiss Ephemeris 2.10.03, Moshier, tropical, geocentric; apparent planetary longitudes and True Node. Porphyry houses use exact cusp assignment. Major transit aspects use a 2° orb; the Jupiter resource scan uses 1.5°. UTC is converted to UT1 for calculation. Display dates use Europe/London.

Porphyry and the six-factor foundation follow the public partner sources. Orbs, ranking and the practice plan are prototype choices. Seven transit candidates were checked. Hard contacts to the Sun and Moon lead this transition-focused selection; connected contacts from the same transit form one sequence. The resource is the natal Moon-Mercury trine.

- [4] Swiss Ephemeris programming interface
- [5] IANA time-zone database: Europe

Six-factor natal framework: source [1]. Porphyry confirmation: [1, 2]. Timing-course context: [3]. Software and time handling: [4, 5]. Public descriptions were consulted; paid course interiors and proprietary report texts remain outside this source base.

Independent concept prepared for Johannes Vasco Lockwood, with AI-assisted production. All report prose, synthesis components and graphics are newly created for this prototype. Fictional case; Kaypacha review and commercial approvals pending.
